Overseer of the Redeemed Christian Church of God, Pastor Enoch Adeboye saying he was now "a brand new president."

He pleaded to meet the aspirations of Nigerians because he has learnt his lessons during his first tenure in office.

In an address at the joint sitting of the National Assembly, the president restated that it was a joint responsibility to ensure national security, adding that his government will not tolerate any unsportsmanlike behaviour.

"We have a duty to maintain national security and public order. We will be restrained, but we will not succumb to harassment and threat to national security by those who are finding it difficult to demonstrate sportsmanship in the face of defeat," he said.

Meanwhile, the traditional rulers from the South-East zone of the country have said that all they want from President ture in the zone and would want him to do something urgent about it.

Nnaji said that though the South-East has continued to suffer political marginalization since the civil war ended, the poor state of government facilities in the zone spoke volumes about the suffering the people of the zone were going through. He pointed out that the Orji River power station has remained grounded in spite of
